	<ul> <li>By c.1897, Perth Suburban Lot 316 had been laid out with 66 residential lots with frontages to Onslow Road (southern side), Smyth Road (northern half), Karrakatta Road (northern half, renamed Hopetoun Terrace in 1901); and Commercial Road (northern half). The southern half of Hopetoun Terrace, on Perth Suburban Lot 319, was subdivided a little latter (but certainly prior to 1906). However, like most of this area, early residential development was slow.</li> <li>The 1901, the Western Australian Post Office Directory listing for Hopetoun Terrace included listings for only 3 residents – Albert Fordwood, William Laker and Thomas Sayers (changing to Edward Freeman, William Laker, and Richard Curtis in 1905). By 1910, the number had increased to 10, still including Laker and Freeman, who were then identified as a firm of sanitary contractors.</li> <li>In the early twentieth century many of the suburban streets were little more than tracks, but as part of a steady program of road construction the Subiaco Council accepted tenders in August 1912 for the construction of six roads, including Hopetoun Terrace.</li> <li>By 1915 street numbers for Hopetoun Terrace had been included in the Post Office Directory, which helps to illustrate the early pattern of settlement, comprising #s 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 18, 25, 26, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 36, 40. At that time Laker was listed at # 30 and Freeman at # 29, suggesting that these might have been two of the earliest houses in Shenton Park (dating from pre 1901).</li> <li>The number of houses continued to gradually increase over the next 20 years, with 23 listed in 1920; 28 in 1925; 34 in 1930; and 37 in 1935. The number then remained stable for many years, with only one additional house listed in 1949 (when there were 20 houses on the western side of the street and 18 on the eastern side).</li> <li>Little information is known about the people who constructed most of</li> </ul>

Lists of building licences published in the West Australian confirm that at least 5 of the houses erected in Hopetoun Terrace in the period 1925-1930 were built by the following developers:</li> <li>T Hollings</li> <li>Brick residence, £550 (Oct 1925)</li> <li>John William Hollier</li> <li>Weatherboard residence, £400 (Oct 1925)</li> <li>Weatherboard residence, £450 (Dec 1925)</li> <li>Dudley &amp; Dwyer:</li> <li>Four room brick residence, £850 (Dec 1927)</li> <li>Oliver Milton Mizen</li> <li>Four room weatherboard residence, £400 (July 1929)</li> <li>The 1949 Post Office Directory entries, and historical aerial photographs dated 1953 and 1963, indicate that there was a small amount of infill development and some limited redevelopment along the street in the early post WWII years. In 2015 there are 47 houses along the street.</li> </ul>

Statement of Significance	The place is a good representative example of an early twentieth century timber house constructed for the working classes. It is a good representative example of the type of housing constructed in the section of Shenton Park to the south of Onslow Road as part of the early consolidation of the suburb following the opening of the West Subiaco Railway Station in September 2008.
