New public art connects generations at Rupert Street pocket park

A new public artwork at Rupert Street pocket park connects almost 30 years of Subiaco history while celebrating culture, environment, and community.

Created by Noongar artist and Elder Sandra Hill and ceramic artist Jenny Dawson, Nanninup means 'a place to stop and rest'.

The artwork traces the journey of the Rainbow Serpent (Wagyl) from Postal Walk to the new park. Its colours and soft-clay textures depict the six Noongar seasons and draw on creeks, rivers, banksias, and remnant bushland.

Hill and Dawson made their first public artwork together, Subiaco Centenary Tiles, which opened at Postal Walk in 1997. Dawson and artist Peter Zuvella worked with Subiaco Primary School students on the original project.

Nearly 30 years later, Hill and Dawson invited a new generation of students from the same school to contribute to Nanninup, using local leaves and bushland textures to create a sense of place.

Mayor David McMullen said the artwork was a special addition to the City's wider public art collection.

"The result is a project that connects generations of Subiaco residents, unveiled right here in our newest park," he said.

New ARTFORM captures Subiaco's creative transformation

The latest edition of ARTFORM showcases the artists, creative businesses, public artworks, and cultural spaces shaping the City of Subiaco. The 100-page publication follows a year in which more than 55 creative activations were delivered through the City's SPACEMRKT partnership, bringing six vacant commercial spaces to life.

Private pool and spa safety inspections underway

The City is continuing regular inspections to help ensure private swimming pool and spa barriers meet legislated safety requirements. Royal Life Saving WA is carrying out the inspections on the City's behalf, and property owners whose pools or spas are due will be contacted directly. Owners are encouraged to check their barriers regularly and address any maintenance issues that could affect their operation.

Think before you bin it

Your red-lidded bin is for general household waste that cannot be reused, recycled, or composted, including soft plastics, nappies, and takeaway coffee cups. Batteries, e-waste, paint, and other hazardous materials must be kept out of every kerbside bin. Electrical items can be dropped off for free at the West Metro Recycling Centre in Shenton Park, and batteries can be dropped off for free to B-Cycle participating stores such as Bunnings, Woolworths, Coles, and other local stores.

Subi Night Market returns for its biggest season yet

Subi Night Market returns to Market Square Park on Saturday 5 September, bringing the sights, sounds, and flavours of a European summer to Subiaco. Following a record 130,000 visitors last season, the new season will feature more than 40 food stalls, 20 artisan traders, six new vendors, and weekly WAAPA performances.

The market runs Saturdays from 5pm to 9pm.

City's tree canopy reaches new heights

The City's tree canopy has increased from 20.8 per cent in 2017 to 22.1 per cent in 2026 following sustained work to retain mature trees, increase planting, and improve biodiversity. In the past year, the City planted 200 banksias, providing an important food source for endangered black cockatoos.

Community Development Grants now open

The latest round of Community Development Grants is open to individuals, community-based organisations, and local groups seeking support for cultural and community activities across the City of Subiaco.

Awarded twice a year, the grants support programs, services, and activities that promote wellbeing and strengthen community belonging.

Applications close 5pm Wednesday 30 September 2026.
Apply or find out more through the City's website at www.subiaco.wa.gov.au.
